Instructor: Dmitry Vekilov is a Chess Master with a USCF rating of 2314, and has been playing in tournaments for 18 years. He currently tutors several chess teams, as well as many individuals, while actively competing in tournaments. He coached the George Mason University chess team to a state championship, and many of those students improved their ratings by hundreds of points.

Format: Each class combines chess instruction and drills, as well as analyzing the games that grandmasters have played, explaining different strategies that they use, and why certain moves are made. At the start of class, the instructor will determine the level at which a student is playing, his/her strengths and weaknesses, and which part of their game needs improvement. They then progress through their lessons at an appropriate pace, learning skills such as:

Traps and pitfalls to be avoided

Middle game play, strategy, and planning

Transitions to the endgame and the endgame itself
